"I have just spent 3 months working at Petrus Communications. My office is only metres from Kirsten Williamson's, the Managing Director. Her door is always open.

A typical day might include skyping colleagues in Bucharest, calling a client in Toulouse to arrange an event in London and liaising with partner agencies around the world. As a student, it has been particularly interesting to see how big companies see the value of students and how they wish to communicate with us. From day one, I have had significant responsibilities, working with major clients with global reputations. It's a really friendly place to work and the patisserie run at lunchtime to the boulangerie is an essential part of the day in this French office!

Now I definitely want to work for an international company, in order to travel and use my language skills. I have made lots of important contacts during my time here, and have received valuable feedback, which I might not have done based in a big corporation."
